

New Jersey's Do NOT Call program has been a great success. In a time when families get so little time to be together, dinner time and evenings together should be viewed as the opportune for to try to sell something. Those of us who do NOT want intrusive salespeople calling should have the absolute right to keep them off our phones and away from our private lives. My home and my family life is NOT a salesroom. The New Jersey Do NOT Call Program is a very sound law that has enhanced our quality of life and protected our personal space. Rather than stiking the law down, I recommend it be offered to other States as a model of a successful program.
